SETTING A COURSE

The classrooms of Glasgow High School were packed with more than just students last Friday. The school hosted a Career Education Day with more than 100 speakers from 18 vocations. Guests included military representatives, lawyers and communications professionals. Individuals from the fashion industry, visual arts careers, various business jobs and computer professionals were present to answer students' questions. Many of the speakers discussed what steps they took to obtain their positions and what they like about their jobs.
